OSCAR MADISON (male, 30s-50s): A New York sportswriter recently divorced. Casual, sloppy, and good-natured, but sarcastic and stubborn.

FELIX UNGAR (male, 30s-50s): A newswriter, newly separated from his wife. Fastidious, neurotic, and hypersensitive, with a compulsive need for cleanliness and order.

MURRAY (male, 30s to 50s): A policeman and regular poker player. Warm, friendly, and a bit slow on the uptake. A peacekeeper among the group, with an affable, good-humored presence.

SPEED (male, 30s to 50s): One of the poker buddies. Sarcastic, impatient, and blunt — quick to complain but loyal at heart.

ROY (male, 30s to 50s): Oscar's accountant and poker friend. Practical, dry-witted, and straightforward. Often the voice of reason when others spiral out.

VINNIE (male, 30s to 50s): The most mild-mannered of the poker friends. Nervous, hesitant, and good-natured. Often caught in the middle, with a softer, gentler energy than the rest.

CECILY PIGEON (female, 25 to 45): The younger of the Pigeon sisters. Sweet, bubbly, and a bit more playful than her sister. Cheerfully flirty and quick to laugh, with a warm, lighthearted energy. Requires a light British accent (not heavy or overly formal).

GWENDOLYN PIGEON (female, 25 to 45): The slightly more reserved of the sisters. Gentle, polite, and soft-spoken, but still fun-loving and giggly. Has a kind, nurturing side. Requires a light British accent (not heavy or overly formal).

Comedy by Neil Simon

A classic comedy that follows the mismatched lives of Oscar Madison and Felix Ungar. Oscar, a carefree, sloppy sportswriter, and Felix, an obsessively neat and anxious man, find themselves newly single after their respective divorces. When Felix moves into Oscar's disorderly apartment, their stark differences quickly turn their living arrangement into a battle of wills—one craving order, the other reveling in chaos. Their friendship is tested by clashing habits, hilarious confrontations, and exasperating personality quirks. With sharp wit and unforgettable moments, it remains a timeless study of friendship, frustration, and the art of cohabitation.
